SPRING REMINDER:

Protecting Collateral as Weather Changes

With spring on the way, it's a good time to think about how seasonal weather can affect property. Spring storms often bring heavy rain, flooding, hail, high winds, and falling debris, events that can cause unexpected damage and expenses to vehicles, equipment, and homes if proper coverage isn't in place.

For borrowers with vehicle or equipment collateral, it helps to:

- Confirm comprehensive and collision coverage are active
- Make sure coverage limits reflect the asset's current value
- Update insurance after moves, upgrades, or usage changes
- Keep proof of insurance current and easy to provide

For borrowers with real estate collateral, spring weather can also create risks such as roof damage, water intrusion, foundation issues, or storm-related structural damage. A seasonal review can help by:

- Verifying homeowner's insurance is active and sufficient
- Checking that coverage reflects current property value and improvements
- Reviewing deductibles and covered perils (wind, hail, flood, etc.)
- Addressing maintenance concerns early to help prevent larger losses

A quick insurance and maintenance check this season can help protect collateral value, prevent unexpected expenses, and keep both borrowers and lenders better protected throughout the spring.
